

A Review of Alaska's Capital Budget 2005-2015

Presented by the Alaska Policy Forum
as a Public Service to All Alaskans

January 2016

ABOUT THE ALASKA POLICY FORUM

Vision: The Alaska Policy Forum will be the primary resource for credible authoritative Alaska policy research and education from a free market perspective.

Mission: APF pursues this vision by conducting timely, relevant, and accurate research and providing free market Alaskan solutions in the most effective means possible to policy makers at the state and local level.

- * We believe that individual freedom and private property are inextricably linked.
- * We believe that government should be limited, transparent and accountable to the citizens.
- * We believe in responsible, sustainable development of our resources.
- * We believe that free markets offer better solutions than government planning.

We take no government funding, local, state or federal. We depend on YOU to keep government accountable. Please help us hold elected officials' feet to the fire and keep liberty alive in Alaska. ## The Pork Report

The Alaska Policy Forum believes that the ideal role of government is to promote economic freedom and individual liberty. Freedom and liberty are infringed upon when the state takes families' PFDs and the state taxes businesses to send the spoils to frivolous programs, special interest groups, and businesses with lobbyists aka "crony capitalists".

When the state picks winners and losers by sending Alaskans' resources to the special interest class, buoyed by lobbyists, it leaves those of us without access to power on the outside looking in.

While this Pork Report tries to provide a clearer perspective of government inefficiency and abuse, the Alaska Policy Forum believes this is just the catalyst for reforms that we must seek in order to accomplish our mission of empowering Alaskans to reclaim control of their lives and to hold elected officials accountable.

Fiscal responsibility within the government starts from the ground up and must be married with a healthy respect for the citizens that the government is meant to serve. This means that not only must we eliminate fraud, waste, and abuse, but we must also ensure that Alaskans are not overburdened by taxes and regulations that grow the size of government and shrink the scope of freedom.

In these times of high budget deficits, Alaskans need to review every capital project to ensure that they are not merely payback to crony capitalists and actually add necessary infrastructure to the state. We cannot afford any more $100 million crime labs, wasteful fish processing plants, pie-in-the-sky barley farms, and Taj Majal school buildings.

By casting a scrutinizing eye at the state and local levels, we can begin to root out senseless waste. From broken promises by government officials, to lack of oversight, to fraudulent scheming, to simple laziness, Alaskans should pay more attention to the waste lying in our own backyards.

We encourage all Alaskans to read the information in this Pork Book and use it to hold their government more accountable and transparent.

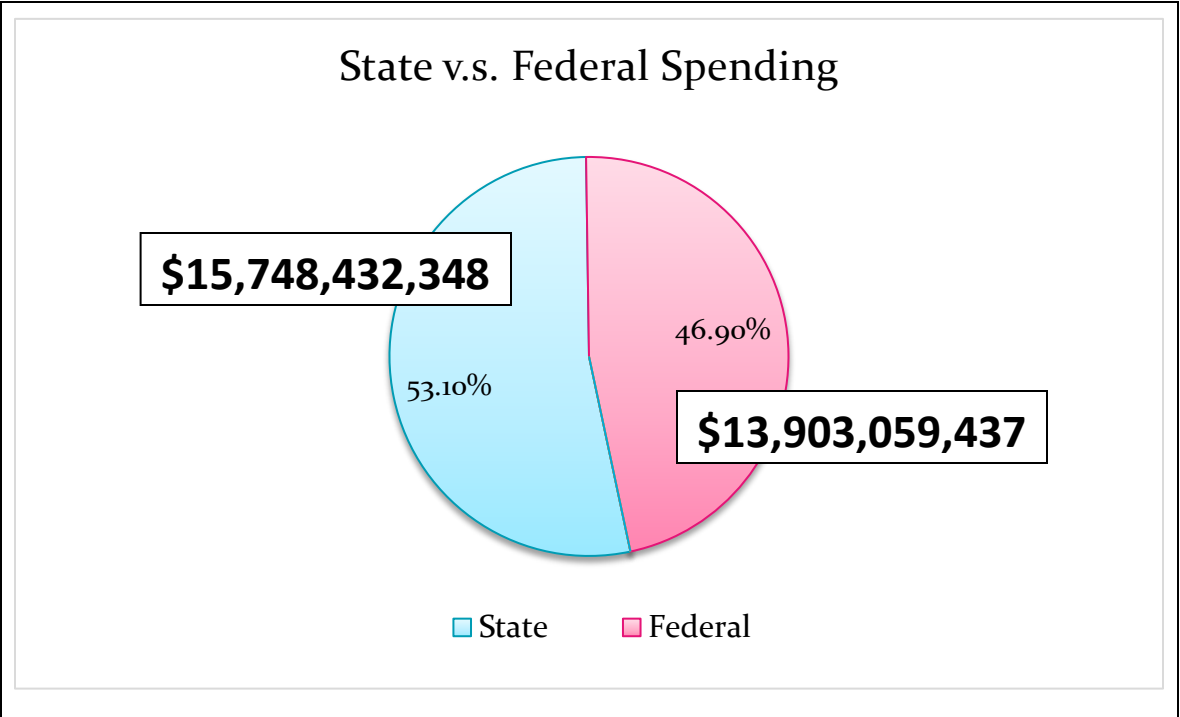

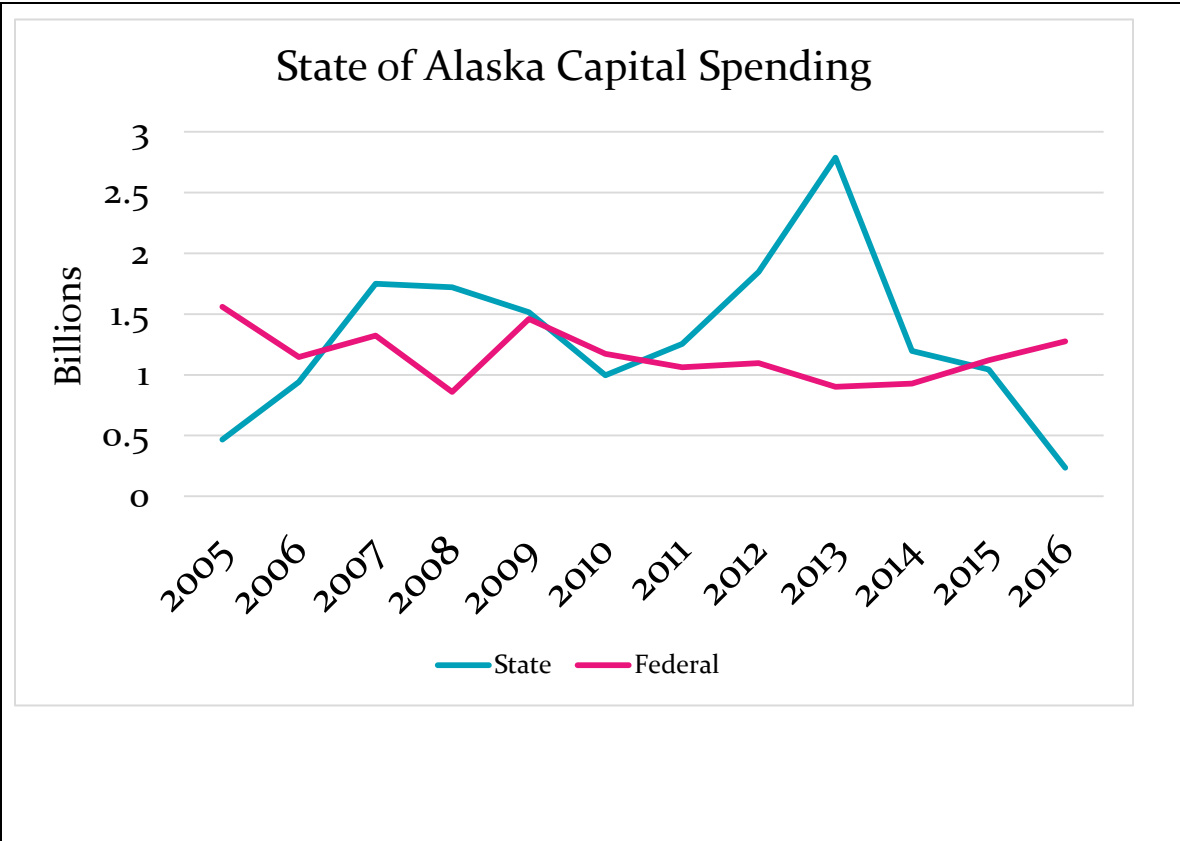

Among the many reforms the Alaska Policy Forum supports, we believe the following will help to extend greater liberty to the individual and restrict government to its intended and limited role:

1. Establish a state spending commission similar to the federal Grace Commission established by President Reagan in 1982. This panel of business executives and private sector volunteers undertook a comprehensive review of the federal government and saved taxpayers $424.4 billion during a three year period. A similar state-level independent body should be tasked with analyzing the entire state budget pinpointing waste and identifying opportunities for savings. It is imperative that this forensic audit be free from political influence and government interference.

2. Put into place a "kicker" law so that if revenues exceed estimates, the Legislature would be required to return the surplus to future Alaska taxpayers. This is necessary since the price of oil fluctuates so much and the returns on investments from the Permanent Fund also fluctuate. It is also important since the Administration currently (February 2016) wants to limit the PFD to a maximum of $1,000 or less, with the state government keeping the remainder to grow government as much as possible.

3. Balance the budget, limit spending to core constitutionally required services, improve transparency and accountability for how Alaskans' money is spent and insist on better results.

Part of this Pork Report includes state grants to various nonprofits. Many of these organizations perform a great service to Alaskans and we do not make a judgment regarding that value to the State and local communities. In fact, many perform necessary services that are much more cost-effective than if the State did them. The trouble is, in these tight budgetary times these nonprofits also must tighten their belts in order to survive.

What Was Your Money Spent On?

Kodiak Launch Complex

$73,405,900

The Kodiak Launch Complex opened in 1998. Since its construction, the State of Alaska has spent over $73 million in capital expenditures on the facility. Operated by the State-owned Alaska Aerospace Corporation, the facility has managed 17 rocket launches, or about one launch per year. Most of these launches have been on behalf of the US Government, and at least 5 launches have been failures. The State of Alaska has spent, according to AAC's website, "for small lift rockets that are delivering a satellite to orbit, the cost is usually $2 to $4 million, although this can increase or decrease based on customer requirements."

Alaska State Crime Lab

$93,000,000

The Alaska State Crime Laboratory in Anchorage was built in 2010 to replace the older, smaller facility. It was one of the most expensive crime labs ever constructed in the United States, and 400% larger than the existing facility. To put that in perspective, the Anchorage crime lab was over twice as expensive as the Phoenix Police Department's new laboratory, the fifth largest city in the country. This expansion was not necessary. The total number of criminal cases submitted to the Alaska crime laboratory was about the same in 2009 as it was in 1994, and new technology has since increased the efficiency of forensic science, reducing the required space for such procedures.

Kenai Coal Gasification Project

$5,000,000

The Kenai Blue Sky Coal Plant was a coal gasification facility proposed by Agrium, Inc. in 2006. The plant would supply their existing fertilizer plant in Nikiski. The Alaska legislature appropriated $5 million for the project in 2006. When the legislature made its first appropriation for the Port MacKenzie Rail Extension in 2007, it was billed as “enabling Port MacKenzie to be the preferred port for shipment of coal to the Agrium Gasification Plant in Nikiski.” The rail extension project has since received $184 million in funding through capital expenditures. Agrium cancelled the gasification project in 2008, and shut down the existing fertilizer plant.

Port MacKenzie Rail Extension

$184,000,000

A rail line to Port MacKenzie has been discussed for decades. The project, being spearheaded by the Alaska Railroad Corporation and the Matanuska-Susitna Borough, has been in the works since 2003 when the first preliminary study took place. The legislature began funding construction in 2008. Since then, the project has received $184 million in capital appropriations. According to the project website, the line is about 75% completed as of October 2015. The entire line will be 32 miles long upon completion, meaning the project has cost over $7 million per mile so far. Not only has the project been over budget and hampered by delays, but the Kenai coal gasification project, which predicated the construction of the rail line, was cancelled. The rail project received no funding for 2016.

Alaska Airlines Center

$109,000,000

The Alaska Airlines Center at the University of Alaska, Anchorage campus is a 5,000 seat sports arena. It houses UAA's athletic programs, in addition to the older Wells Fargo Sports Complex which is still in use. The new facility does not have an ice rink, and as a result the UAA Seawolves hockey team still plays its games at the Sullivan Arena.

Menard Sports Center

$1,555,000

The Menard Sports Center in Wasilla cost $14.7 million to build. It was funded by a one-half percent tax increase voted for by the people of Wasilla. However, in 2006 and 2007 the State of Alaska paid $1,555,000 for new generators, a portable floor, the parking lot, and a kitchen. Why is the State paying for something which the residents of Wasilla chose to fund?

Anchorage Port Expansion

$95,000,000

74% of the merchandise goods and 95% of the refined petroleum products that enter the state of Alaska do so through the Port of Anchorage. The current structure was built in the 1950s. Since 2003, the state has spent over $300 million on an effort to expand the port, including $95 million in the last decade alone (since 2009, specifically). However, the project has yet to be completed and the Municipality of Anchorage has sued four construction and engineering firms regarding problems and delays. How much money has been wasted, and how much more will have to be spent, due to poor planning and incompetence?

Alaska Laborers' Training Facility

$9,400,000

The Laborers International Union of North America Local 341, a private labor union, received a new training facility courtesy of the Alaska state legislature. From fiscal year 2012 through 2014, the State of Alaska appropriated over $9 million for the new building, located in Chugiak. The use of public funds to pay for private union facilities is highly questionable. Union dues do pay for the majority of these construction costs, but why not all? If need be, the union should finance the project with loans, just like homeowners do when they purchase a home. Alternatively, the union could wait until it has adequate money on hand to construct new buildings. During elections, unions contribute to candidates who support their causes, as all special interests do. However, when the State of Alaska provides millions of free dollars to a labor union, they can use dues money to finance campaigns while using the State's money to fund construction.

Don't Sweat the Small Stuff!

When it comes to government spending, smaller projects go a long way. Cities and boroughs all across Alaska get free projects every year, mostly funded through the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development in the capital budget. Here are one hundred select examples of free stuff from the last decade. This list (alphabetical by location) should not be considered comprehensive.

There's nothing wrong with building community centers, libraries, parks, playgrounds, or gun ranges. On the contrary, these are great amenities. But is the State capital budget really the right place for these expenditures? Shouldn't the community that uses a facility be the primary financier of its construction and maintenance? Should Fairbanks pay for a gun range in Petersburg? Should Bethel pay for a golf course in Anchorage? Are these kinds of projects something the State will be able to afford in the coming years?

Nonprofits

Nonprofits receive millions of dollars in funding for projects and programs just about every year in the Capital Budget. In addition to these specific organizations, many other nonprofits receive grants, including community centers, cultural centers, senior centers, museums, libraries, shooting ranges, hunters associations, sportsmen clubs, hatcheries, hockey leagues, baseball leagues, and more. Many of these organizations do great things. But with declining revenue, we have to ask ourselves what can we afford, and what can be better funded through private charity and individual donations. The following is a list of specific dollar amounts granted to nonprofit organizations, by year.
